PREFACE

In a slight departure from our normal offering of early dynastic Chinese art, though staying within the same broad aesthetic framework, Priestley & Ferraro is delighted to present for Asian Art in London's 2023 Summer Event this exhibition devoted to smaller scale works from the oeuvre of Chinese artists Chang Chien-ying and Fei Cheng-wu. These two artists, well placed within the Chinese art establishment before travelling to this country in 1946, never returned to China but spent the remainder of their lives working in Britain, bringing understanding of Chinese art to British artists, scholars and collectors.

The title of the show is a loose translation of the first two characters of the Feis' (they married in 1953) Chinese studio name 霧明樓 "Wuming Lou", and neatly encapsulates the interplay of elements in traditional Chinese painting, as well as the unusual passage of their lives.

The paintings have been selected to display the widest range of medium, style, expression and subject matter characteristic to each artist.

On a personal note, through my wife Nong, the great niece of Chang Chien-ying, the Feis became family to me also, and I was lucky enough to know them for more than a decade. After their deaths at the beginning of the millennium, I was able to spend time getting to know their paintings, and my appreciation has never ceased to grow. Their work has a sui generis quality, partly from the Western – one could almost say British – sensibility that informs it, and partly because its Chinese components evolved away from the mainstream of Chinese painting, calibrated only by the taste and judgement of the artists themselves. I hope you will share my pleasure in them.

Our thanks at Priestley & Ferraro go to all those involved in the preparation of the catalogue: to Nong Priestley, whose advice on the Feis has been invaluable; to the team at Li Ching Foundation, particularly Crystal Xiong, for work on the chronology of Fei Cheng-wu, from which some details have been borrowed here; to Zhu Zhiguang for the photography, Peter Keenan for the design, Richard Harris for the repro, and to Steve Rose and Doveton Press for the printing.

A SKETCH OF THE LIVES OF THE ARTISTS

Chang Chien-ying (1909-2003) and Fei Cheng-wu (1911-2000) - the Feis - were the first Chinese academically trained artists to settle and make their living - as artists - in Britain. Theirs was an extraordinary story. At the time of the Anti-Japanese War of Resistance (1937-1945), as young qualified artists, they found themselves part of the greater group of artists relocated to Chongqing, then part of Sichuan province. There have been few times in human history when such an abundance of creativity was concentrated in one place, fuelling a century's worth of artistic production. In this hothouse of talent, they counted amongst their friends, colleagues and teachers, a group of artists whose names read like a roll call of twentieth century Chinese art, including Fu Baoshi (1904-1965), Pang Xunqin (1906-1985), Wu Zuoren (1908-1997), Huang Junbi (1898-1991), Lin Fengmian (1900-1991), Chen Zhifo (1895-1962), Xie Zhiliu (1910-1997), Sun Zongwei (1912-1979), Zhang Daqian (1899-1983), and many others, but above all Xu Beihong (1895-1953), who was their mentor. Then, as history turned again, they found themselves in London, separated permanently from their homeland. Complementary in character, outlook and stylistic repertoire, they joined forces by marrying in 1953, and together faced their new life as British Chinese artists, artistically isolated by comparison with their time in Chongqing, but at the fascinating interface of two grand artistic traditions, from both of which they drew inspiration.

FORMATIVE PERIOD

Fei was born in Wujiang, Jiangsu province, into an accomplished family of politicians, architects and academics. His uncle, Cy Young [Yang Xizhi (1897-1964)], to whom the young Fei looked up, was one of the first generation of animators in China, eventually moving to America and working for Disney, most notably on Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs. Fei's first contact with Xu Beihong seems to have been in 1928 when he attended a talk given by the artist at the Suzhou Academy of Fine Arts. This inspired him to write "A Summary of Western Schools of Painting" in his school journal. In 1930 he entered the Art Specialty Department of the National Central University in Nanjing for which Xu Beihong served as Director of the Western Painting section. His classmates included artists who were to play important parts in his life, including Chang An-chih [Zhang Anzhi (1911-1990)], Chen Hsiao-nan [Chen Xiaonan (1908-1993)], Sun To Tzu [Sun Duoci (1913-1975)], and – especially - Chang Chien-ying. In 1935, he entered the Suzhou Academy of Fine Arts and studied oil painting under Yan Wenliang (1893-1988), one of the "fathers of Chinese oil painting".

Chang was born in Wuxi, Jiangsu province. She studied calligraphy as a child under the guidance of her father, a customs official, and her elder brother. She entered the National Central University in 1932, studying under Lu Fengzi (1886-1959), Zhang Shuqi (1899-1956) and Xu Beihong himself.

THE CHONGQING PERIOD

Fei's part in the Anti-Japanese War of Resistance took him to Chongqing where he was responsible for mobilizing artists to produce propaganda supporting the war effort. In 1941 he travelled to Kunming to prepare a guest house for the American Volunteer Group of the air force. It was in Kunming, too, in 1942, that he met by chance his former tutor Xu Beihong, who persuaded him to come back and work for the Fine Arts Department of the National Central University which had also moved to Chongqing. Fei accepted, taking up the post of lecturer, under head of department Lü Sibai (1905-1973). In 1944, Fei participated in the first exhibition of the China Institute of Fine Arts in Chongqing. In May 1945, indicating an early admiration that was to last his whole life, he penned an article entitled "Miss Chang Chien-ying, a warrior in the art world” for Chang Chien-ying’s first solo exhibition.

Chang, meanwhile, assisted Xu Beihong directly in his efforts to establish the China Institute of Fine Arts in Panxi, a suburb of Chongqing, and became the secretary and research fellow of the Institute.

THE MISSION TO BRITAIN

In 1946, with the coming of victory in the Anti-Japanese War of Resistance, the National Chinese University moved back to Nanjing. Xu Beihong, who had taken up a new post as principal of the National Beiping Art College was convinced that Chinese artists could learn from the West, particularly in the methods of working from observation. To this end, through his relationship with the Education Minister, Zhu Jiahua (1893-1963) and assisted by the British Council, with funds from Britain’s portion of the Boxer Indemnity Fund, he selected four artists to travel to Britain to study at the art colleges there, with the intention that on their return their knowledge would encourage a new synthesis of Eastern and Western modes of art. The four selected were Chang An-chih, Chen Hsiao-nan, Chang Chien-ying and Fei Cheng-wu. Laden with parting gifts from their artist friends, they boarded the flight in October. After brief stops including Vietnam, India, Iraq, Greece and France— where the artists took the opportunity to make sketches of what they saw – they arrived finally in London, England.

EARLY LONDON PERIOD

With help from the British Council, Fei studied at the Courtauld Institute of Art, University of London and at Camberwell School of Art, while Chang enrolled at Chelsea School of Art.

In 1947, with their funding drying up, Fei and Chang decided to hold a joint exhibition in London. One of the visitors to the exhibition was Professor Randolph Schwabe, Director of the Slade School of Art, who offered them a place at the school, where they stayed until 1950. Another artist they met during this period was Stanley Spencer, with whom they became friends. They visited him in Cookham in 1947 and on one unusual occasion – 28th August 1947 – Spencer drew a portrait of Chang while Fei drew a portrait of him, which Spencer countersigned. Spencer, implausibly for one whose work revolved so much around his home of Cookham, was to go on a visit to China in 1954 with a delegation of philosophers and politicians, a journey which Fei and Chang’s friendship must surely have made less daunting. In addition to their work in fine art, the Feis also studied ceramics under Dora Billington (1890-1960) at the Central School of Arts and Crafts.

LATER LONDON PERIOD

In January 1950 Fei and Chang, together with their colleagues Chang An-chih and Chen Hsiao-nan held a joint exhibition at Barrow's in Birmingham. It was to be their last showing together. Holding to their original plan, Chang An-chih and Chen Hsiao-nan returned home, to a China where a Communist government was now in power. Fei and Chang, too, planned to return home. However, with their departure scheduled for 19th February, Fei fell seriously ill and was unable to make the embarkation. Over the period following Xu Beihong made repeated entreaties to them to come back to China, but they made no further plans. As it turned out, Fei never saw China again, while Chang was not to see it until more than fifty years later when she made a brief visit to her remaining family in Shanghai in 2001.

In May 1953, Fei and Chang were married at the Kensington and Chelsea Register Office, with Stanley Spencer and their friend the playwright Hsiung Shih-I [Xiong Shiyi (1902-1991)] among those in attendance.

The years that followed were productive ones, with a full schedule of exhibitions of their work, in both one-man and joint shows at venues all over the country, including the Leicester Galleries and Tryon Gallery in London, the Graves Art Gallery in Sheffield, the Derby Museum and Art Gallery, the Royal West of England Academy, Bristol and the Scottish Lyceum Gallery, Edinburgh. Chang was elected to be a member of the Royal Institute of Painters in Watercolours, the Women's International Art Club and the The Society of Woman Artists. They were also both regular contributors to the Summer Exhibition of the Royal Academy of Arts, London. Institutional collectors of their work included the Percival David Foundation, London, St Johns College, Oxford and the Ashmolean Museum, Oxford; while among their private collectors was the noted connoisseur W. W. Winkworth.

True to their belief in the value of observation, they travelled extensively around Great Britain.

In the early years, they visited Oxford (1947) as well as the counties around London. Later, they ventured further, sketching and painting in the West Country (1950), the Lake District (1956), Scotland (1958) and Wales (1959).

In 1956 Fei authored a book, "Brush Drawing in the Chinese Manner" (The Studio Publications, London & New York), on the history and techniques of Chinese paintings.

The Feis had a rich social life. They lived much of the latter part of their lives in North Finchley, at the centre of the north London Chinese community. Apart from their London friends, there was a continuous traffic of friends from China, Taiwan, America and other parts of the world passing through. Chang's social talents were almost as remarkable as her artistic ones, whether taking part in amateur Chinese opera, playing mahjong, cooking great feasts and holding her guests spellbound with her wit and charm. Fei was quieter, with a scholarly demeanour, and was for many years the first person to turn to for an opinion on the authenticity of old Chinese paintings. In the 1960s a constant companion was their Pekinese, Zhe'er whose portrait Fei, in particular, enjoyed painting. They took students, and occasionally executed commissions, usually for friends. In 1982, Chang's great-niece Zhang Nong came from Shanghai to live with them and, towards the end of their lives, care for them.

Fei died in 2000. Chang survived him by three years, dying in 2003.

怒髮衝冠，憑欄處、瀟瀟雨歇。
抬望眼，仰天長嘯，壯懷激烈。
三十功名塵與土，八千里路雲和月。
莫等閒、白了少年頭，空悲切。

靖康恥，猶未雪；臣子恨，何時滅？
駕長車，踏破賀蘭山缺。
壯志飢餐胡虜肉，笑談渴飲匈奴血。
待至頭，收拾舊山河，朝天闕！
